Tuscan, The Wild Man.

William H. A. Fletcher a young college man of New York City is traveling with the carnival which was here as the wild man. He caught a cold at Pueblo by laying in the pit without any clothes on except a sheep skin and was unable to show here. He stood outside the Electric show and advised the people to see Lunette. He had very long hair and in Pueblo pulled it over his face and put in false teeth and his hands and feet were chained with huge chains and his skin browned. He was in a pit on some hay, his keeper standing near with a pitch fork to subdue him. Hundreds of people paid a dime to see him; he being known as, "Tuscan, the Wild Man." When the crowd would get close he would tug at the chain and growl and snarl and strike at the crowd with a pair of cow horns he had mounted on a stick covered with sheep skin. He struck at a black negro and he turned white. While he was Tuscan in the pit he had to bear the humiliation of being spat on with tobacco juice.

It means sport of the kind that warms the cockles of the western heart. It means that the tournament will be the best ever held in the west.
